Remote work across borders

... a “must have” benefit in the global battle for skilled labour

- „East or west, home is the best” - much holds true for this proverb but still more and more employees do not intend limiting themselves to their vacation days to expand their mind through travel, visit relatives or simply enjoy a warmer climate during the cold months.
- What used to be reserved for exciting business trips is in the age of digital nomads often expected as a personal “must have” and thus plays a key role in the selection of an employer.
- Most companies are generally happy to accommodate this. However, the diverse legal framework – immigration, labour, social security and tax law – that affects the employment relationship from two jurisdictions at once, can make it difficult for HR departments to administer remote work in a legally secure manner.
- We help our clients to navigate the jungle of overlapping legal framework – be it for general policies or individual concessions – so that they can confidently communicate towards their employees what is feasible and what may not be.
- Our international network covers almost every conceivable destination, which allows an unbureaucratic involvement of local counsel where necessary with regards to the law of the desired destination country.

Remote work across borders

What you might be looking for:

Overall doability resp. compliance assessment

- Mandatory labour law provisions
- Immigration law prerequisites
- Relevant social security scheme & (continued) application of German statutory social security
- Proper accounting of wage tax and risk assessment re corporate tax liability (“add-on” from our network)

Remote work policies or work agreements

Individual remote work arrangements or sabbatical

Miscellaneous (support with reporting and other obligation under local law)

International Relocation

Well begun is half done.

- For projects that require international relocation of personnel, it is advisable to include this item in the strategic planning and the envisaged timeline from the outset. This particularly concerns:
 - Temporary international assignment (short and long term);
 - Relocation of employees;
 - Recruiting from abroad;
 - Temporary agency work across borders.
- To be considered are potential administrative delays at the foreign missions and local authorities, who only provide a "fast track" to a limited extent and often are backlogged as well as additional applications for spouses and children, if they shall accompany the employee concerned.
- We provide strategic advice during project planning, help our client with setting up a step plan and work with them to determine the appropriate residence permit, where necessary.
- You have essentially already set up your project, but are unsure how to properly account for the employment relationship across borders? Here, too, we assist our clients, with regards to tax issues together with colleagues from our network.
